Just before the ushers went about with their pannikins to collect the afternoon's offering Hilly declared himself again as to the newspapers and their accounts of his revival.

"I'm tired of some of these ginks putting things in the newspapers that aren't so. I want to tell you people that I've never seen such a turn out for afternoon meetings as I've seen with him, and his statement about vent "Amen" from the ministers' section of the rostrum. They expect to make the trip in eight hours under favorable conditions. Hilly was at luncheon when he said it, clad in his flowered kimono fastened at the throat with a diamond pin. Mrs. Sunday had invited the reporters in while her husband was finishing his meal that he might lose no time in transfixing the newspaper reporters who had, according to him, falsely chronicled the Paterson revival meetings.

But "liars" was not the only characterisation Billy applied to the offending newspaper men. He swal-lowed a mouthful of stewed peaches and started out in earnest
